From the President's Desk . . .

THERE were two men . . . a world apart. Their mission was the same. They orbited the earth.

They saw the same sky, the same stars. One, Lt. Col. John Glenn, upon entering the vault of heaven, reaffirmed that he had made his peace with God "long ago."

The other, Russia's Titov, gloried in the material achievements of his Fatherland.

The difference does not end here. Col. Glenn, who epitomizes Americanism at its best, is a graduate of a small Christian college in Ohio. His decision to attend such a school reflects Christian upbringing. The quality of his personal and family life speaks well of his Christian training and has upgraded the image of the United States.

Much less spectacular, but just as vital is the army of Christian leaders in all walks of life who have attended Taylor and other Christian colleges. The impact of their lives in the service professions and on the mission fields of the world can hardly be overestimated.

But we cannot pause on this high note. The population in the U. S.—to say nothing of the world—is increasing many times faster than the Church is growing. Our world is "exploding" into paganism.

This is one reason Taylor has undertaken a dramatic quest for greatness and has set high goals for the future. The Board of Trustees, at its January meeting, authorized the Fort Wayne Relocation Committee to proceed immediately with the development of Taylor's new Fort Wayne campus. We are hoping that construction on the 700-acre site will begin by late summer or early fall. The architectural plans for the new Administration Building are nearly completed.

While Fort Wayne business leaders are developing the necessary large advance gifts, the Taylor family continues to demonstrate its vigorous support.

But the "products" of Taylor—her graduates—will not arise from new buildings alone. They will rise from an educational environment steeped in Christian heritage and academic excellence—Taylor's twin peaks of distinction. To provide this spirit and high scholastic standards depends, in part, on a university's faculty.

Because of its conviction that Taylor's faculty members are one of its unique attributes, the Board of Trustees spent an equal amount of time on the problems of adequate faculty salaries. The results: over a two-year period various faculty salaries will be increased to match the median in the field. But, even then the compensations will not be equal to the quality of educational services these men and women provide.

Much prayer and hard work lie ahead. But with such a foundation we cannot fail to achieve our destiny.

—Dr. B. Joseph Martin
President

BANQUET, MUSIC, REUNIONS TOP ALUMNI DAY AGENDA

The class of 1927, celebrating their 35th graduation anniversary, will be hosts for the day and will provide leadership for the festivities.

The delightful program presented last year by the college music department was so well received that a half-hour musical is being planned for this year's banquet. Sharing the spotlight will be the drama department which will also give a 30-minute performance.

No activities are scheduled after the banquet, to give alumni and friends opportunity to visit informally in the dining room.
